

Plants

A research study by NASA revealed that enclosed interior environments can contain large amounts of Formaldehyde Benzene and other harmful gases. These gases can often affect employee's health, a condition known as 'sick building syndrome.'

Plants and your

environment

The study also demonstrated that photosynthesis, (a plant's natural oxygen production) removes much of these nasty and potentially harmful gases. Quality maintained foliage plants can also increase worker productivity and can help staff feel less stressed and more attentive.
